There was as great a crowd in the rooms as usual. In Crisp's headquarters there was so much business being done that every man who is assisting there had more than he could do in receiving visitors and holding conferences.

It was said that they were intrenched against any combination Mr. Mills could make, and that during the day they had made gains in unexpected quarters.

If such a step should be taken it is believed that it would probably result in a general rush of members to one of the other of the two leading candidates, and that the fight would be to a finish between the two.

The fact that the plan is being taiked about so much, however, is considered to lessen its chance of success, even to the extent of making the combination.

WITHIN THE NEXT TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.

The great ship yard has been in a state of confusion for more than a week preparing for this occasion. For two days past workmen have been busy erecting a platform for the christening party about the bow of the ship and preparing a banquet room, in which the collation given by the Cramps in honor of the cramps in honor of the event could be served. Prior to that time the carjenters had been engaged in the construction of the cradle on which the huge steel hull should rock as she slipped into the water. The ship builders had hoped that in view of the peculiar interest which the state of New York has in the new cruiser Gov. Hill might have attended today's ceremonies, accompanied by his staff, and because the appropriation for the vessel had been made on the recommendation of Secretary Whitney they had hoped that eax-President Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland and Mr. and Mrs. Whitney would be present. But all of these had sent regrets. Chauncey M. Depew, Governor-elect Flower and several other distinguished men had also found themselves unable to accept the invitation to the launch. They came not very far apart, the New York party being under the care and guidance of Henry W. Raymond, private secretary to Secretary Tracy, the Washington party chaperoned by Lieut. Buckingham of the navy. In a nebulous sort of a way the campaign fabricator has intimated that at an appropriate time the Hatch votes would be transferred to the candidate who was regarded with favor by Mr. Hatch, should it be evident to the Missourian that he could not win. There are some muscular men in the democratic majority and there may be a few to will move rapidly into situations which the angelic host would avoid, but neither the representative nor the heeler will make any such statement within earshot of Mr. Hatch.

"If I was absolutely certain that a combination to defeat any one or all of the other known candidates was contemplated I would never dream of such a thing, and if any man should come to me with a proposition of that sort I would kick him out of the room." Mr. Hatch said that this afternoon to a STAE reporter, not in a bombastic fashion, but with an ominously, busness-like tone in his voice. Anybody, who thinks the Missourian is not in earnest, might secure a sufficiency of testimony by going up to parior 40, Willard's Hotel, and suggesting the desirability of a combine.

THAT JAY GOULD STORY.

Miss Page was to break over the New York's bow. It reposed in a cream-colored case. Around it had been woven an exquisite network of gold cord, from which hung cream-colored ribbons fast-ened together by a tassel of gold. From the neck of the bottle hung three streamers. One of them, of pure white, had the name of the New York printed on it in letters of gold. The others were blue, with narrow-bordered stripes of red and white. On one of them was printed Miss Page's name, on the other the date of Miss Page's name, on the othe

KNOCKING AWAY THE SUPPORTS.

When the honr of 2 o'clock arrived the workmen under the hull began to knock away the long poles which had served as props at the long poles which had served as props at the vessel's sides. Before this the battering ram and maliets had driven the wedges slowly and evenly into the sides of the cradle until they had raised the hull's enormous weight clear of the keel blocks. Then these blocks were knocked away one after another and the great hull rested quite free from the ground against the sides of the huge timber cradle which had been built about it. During all of this time the noise had been almost deafening. The incessant pounding, the clatter of falling timbers and the shouts of the workmen had filled the air.

Conversation among the guests of the occa-

the workmen had filled the air.

Conversation among the guests of the occasion had been almost wholly suspended as they watched with carnest interest the progress of the work. The last of the "shores" or side timbers had been knocked away, the last of the keel blocks had been displaced. All that held the hull and its timber cradle was the big iron bolts that fastened the cradle to the ways at a point near the bows. Just below these bolts on each side a line had been drawn across the timber. On each side of each of these runways at the place marked by been drawn across the timber. On each side of each of these runways at the place marked by this chalk line a workman took his place. They had two big saws over the runways and waited for the signal to put them in motion. To cut through the timbers at this point would free the cradle from the restraint of those big bolts, which were all that stood between the New York and freedom.

Mr. Cramp escorted Miss Page to the altar, on whose eminence she stood in full view of the waiting thousands, sharing with the inaminate mass in front of her the interest of the throng. Above her head rose the graceful line of the

But very few outside the christening party platforms. For the collation to follow the launch most elaborate preparations had been a launching at the Cramp yards, a luncheon has been served in the company's offices, which usually have been inadequate to the demands of the occasion.

In special honor of today's event a banquet room had been fitted up in the long model loft over the main shops. The loft had been partitioned into kitchen and banquet hall. In the banquet room a carpet had been laid and the walls and ceiling had been decorated with

As the hull entered the water the current caught it and turned it almost broadsile to the shore. There was a rattle of chains and was had by a long runway, and from that platform another runway led to the banquet room.

THE WASHINGTON PARTY.

The chief interest of the early afternoon centered in the arrival of the visitors from New York and Washingtor. Arrangements had been made with the Pennsylvania railroad for two special trains, one of twelve cars to leave yersey City at 11 o'clock in the morning and the other of nine cars to leave Washington at that these boys should have manned the deck of the New York, but the danger of a sudden lurch of the vessel, or some other mishap, made Mr. Cramp afraid to carry out this part of the program. So a crew of twenty-five men from the yard went out on the launching trip to

MORE WORK TO BE DONE.
From her anchorage she will be towed to one of the wharves, where she will remain for nearly a year while workmen fasten on her steel armor, put her boilers in place and fit her out for duty. The tug whistles were still sounding, spasmodically, when Mr. Cramp es-corted the guests to the banquet room, where

The cause of the attempted murder and suicide was domestic troubles. For some time past Pollock and his wife had been on unfriendly terms. About 8 o'clock this morning they arose and retired to separate rooms to dress. Pollock emerged first and waited for his wife to leave her room. As soon as she passed through the door he drew a revolver from his hip pocket and fired. The ball passed through the hip and she fell to the floor. Pollock then turned the pistol to his head and fired, killing himself instantly. Mrs. Pollock will probably recover.
